

Home School Legal Defense Association

In 1983 Home School Legal Defense Association was established as a nonprofit advocacy organization to defend and advance the constitutional right of parents to direct the education of their children and to protect family freedoms. Many are familiar with their efforts in these areas, but what many don't know is that HSLDA has been partnering with state leaders across the country to help them establish, protect, and extend home education freedom. In many cases, HSLDA literally wrote the text of many of our home school laws. In addition, they monitor freedom at the international and federal levels, maintaining an office in Washington D.C. to aid in their efforts to work with elected officials, government agencies, and all branches of the military. If a law or government policy impacts home educators, it is a safe bet HSLDA is on top of it and is working with appropriate state leaders across our land. HSLDA hosts national and regional home school leadership conferences, works with national media, provides help for families with special educational needs, commissions and distributes credible home education research, helps establish home school freedom in foreign lands, provides help to home educating widows through the Home School Foundation (HSF), and much more. Your HSLDA membership not only protects your family, it also helps maintain all these irreplaceable efforts.
